I. INTRODUCTION

This reply incorporates by reference the Defendants' Joint Reply to Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Opposition and Joint Reply to Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Opposition (collectively "Joint Replies").

Contrary to Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' ("Direct Plaintiffs") and Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' ("Indirect Plaintiffs") mischaracterization of the Hitachi defendants' supplemental motions to dismiss, the fact remains that both the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Consolidated Complaint ("DP-CC") and Indirect Purchaser Plaintiffs' Consolidated Amended Complaint ("IP-CAC") (collectively "Complaints"), with their handfuls of stray mentions of "Hitachi," are each wholly insufficient to state a conspiracy claim against any of the Hitachi defendants and fail to provide any of the Hitachi defendants with fair notice of the grounds for such a claim. Under the most recent Ninth Circuit authority interpreting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 127 S. Ct. 1955 (2007), Rule 8(a)(2)'s "notice pleading" rule was abrogated by Twombly for purposes of adequate pleading in antitrust cases. Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 2008 WL 613924, at *8 n.5 (9th Cir. Mar. 7, 2008). In such cases, the Complaints must "plead the necessary evidentiary facts to support [their] conclusions." Id. at *3 (emphasis added).

While both Oppositions fixate on an idea that the allegations in the Complaints need not be detailed "defendant-by-defendant," they ignore the predicate requirement that the Complaints plausibly allege in the first instance both a conspiracy and that each of the Hitachi defendants joined in the conspiracy. The Complaints rely solely on general, conclusory allegations against "all Defendants" or "all Japanese defendants," and in so doing, fail to state facts sufficient to allege the existence of an agreement (essential to a conspiracy claim), or even parallel conduct. Moreover, the Complaints fail to allege that any of the Hitachi defendants joined and participated in any conspiracy. Accordingly, the Hitachi defendants' motions to dismiss should be granted.

II. STATEMENT OF FACTS

A. DP-CC

As noted in the Hitachi defendants' motion ("Hitachi Direct Motion"), Hitachi, Ltd., Hitachi Displays, Ltd., and Hitachi Electronic Devices (USA), Ltd. are each separate and distinct

1 legal entities. By mere ipse dixit, however, the DP-CC bundles them together as “Hitachi.”

2 But the DP-CC includes only a handful of references even to the artificial composite 3 “Hitachi”:

- 4 • early presence in the TFT-LCD industry (even while acknowledging that Hitachi
- 5 Displays, Ltd. did not exist prior to 2002);
- 6 • supposed quarterly average price relating to a single end TFT-LCD product;
- 7 • small number of business relationships with other entities; and
- 8 • participation in a single trade association.

9 DP-CC ¶¶ 39, 92-93, 102, 130, 159, 162, 164; see Hitachi Direct Motion, Section II.

10 B. IP-CAC

11 The IP-CAC also bundles together Hitachi, Ltd., Hitachi Displays, Ltd., and Hitachi 12 Electronic Devices (USA), Ltd. as “Hitachi.” IP-CAC ¶¶ 85-87, 89.

13 Specifically regarding the artificial composite “Hitachi,” the IP-CAC includes a handful 14 of statements relating only to business relationships of nonspecified Hitachi defendants. IP-CAC 15 ¶¶ 120, 122, 126, 156; see Hitachi Indirect Motion, Section II.

16 III. ARGUMENT

17 A. The Complaints Fail To Plead Facts Sufficient To State A Plausible Claim Of 18 The Existence Of An Antitrust Conspiracy And Participation By Any Of The Hitachi Defendants In Such A Conspiracy.

19 “[T]o satisfy pleading requirements in the antitrust context, the plaintiffs must allege that 20 each individual defendant joined the conspiracy and played some role in it because, at the heart of 21 an antitrust conspiracy is an agreement and a conscious decision by each defendant to join it.” In 22 re Elec. Carbon Prods. Antitrust Litig., 333 F. Supp. 2d 303, 311-12 (D.N.J. 2004) (citing Jung v.
23 Assoc. of Am. Med. Colls., 300 F. Supp. 2d 119, 163-64 (D.D.C. 2004)) (internal quotation marks 24 omitted) (emphasis added). “Simply using the global term ‘defendants’ to apply to numerous 25 parties without any specific allegations that would tie each particular defendant to the conspiracy 26 is not sufficient.” Id. at 312 (internal quotation marks omitted) (noting, however, that the court 27 may deny a motion to dismiss if it can fairly draw inferences from the alleged conspirators’ 28 behavior indicating that they participated in a conspiracy).

1 The Complaints must allege enough facts to put each of the Hitachi defendants on notice
 2 of the grounds for relief against it. Plaintiffs are required to provide the bases of their entitlement 3 to relief, beyond “labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of 4 action.” Twombly, 127 S. Ct. at 1965.

5 In their Oppositions, both sets of Plaintiffs skip over the threshold failures of their 6 respective Complaints even to sufficiently allege the existence of, and the Hitachi defendants’ 7 participation in, a conspiracy in the first instance. Instead, they seek to divert attention to a straw 8 man, inaccurately attributing to the Hitachi defendants a supposed insistence to proceed 9 “defendant-by-defendant.”

10 The Hitachi defendants do not contend that the Complaints must be compartmentalized, 11 nor do they ask the Court to examine the claims against them separately from the rest of the 12 allegations in the Complaints. Rather, the Hitachi defendants’ motions points out the Complaints’ 13 failures to allege facts sufficient to state that any of the Hitachi defendants “joined the conspiracy 14 and played some role in it.” In re OSB Antitrust Litig., 2007 WL 2253419, at *5 (E.D.Pa. Aug. 3, 15 2007). Plaintiffs’ general allegations as to all Defendants or all Japanese defendants, and the 16 Complaints’ handful of allegations as to “Hitachi” fail to establish a plausible conspiracy claim 17 and further fail to put any of the Hitachi entities on notice of the grounds for relief against them in 18 either Complaint. Here, as in the Jung case:

19 20 [P]laintiffs’ use of the term “defendants” to refer to multiple defendants 21 situated very differently from one another in the context of general and 22 global allegations is insufficient . . . Plaintiffs cannot escape their burden 23 of alleging that each defendant participated in or agreed to join the 24 conspiracy by using the term “defendants” to apply to numerous parties 25 without any specific allegations as to [the Hitachi defendants].

26 Jung, 300 F. Supp. 2d at 163. The Ninth Circuit held less than a month ago that “[t]erms like 27 ‘conspiracy, or even ‘agreement’ . . . might well be sufficient in conjunction with a more specific 28 allegation—for example, identifying a written agreement . . . but a court is not required to accept such terms as a sufficient basis for a complaint” in a Section 1 conspiracy case. Kendall, 2008

1 WL 613924, at *3 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Instead, the Kendall Court 2 held that under Twombly, plaintiffs must “plead the necessary evidentiary facts to support their 3 conclusions.” Id. (emphasis added). Ultimately, “the complaint[s] do[] not answer the basic 4 questions: who, did what, to whom (or with whom), where, and when?” Id. at *4. Neither the 5 DP-CC nor the IP-CAC plead any evidentiary facts that come close to meeting the required 6 standard.

7 Plaintiffs seek to blur the distinction between the sufficiency of allegations to state a 8 conspiracy claim at all, and the sufficiency of allegations of acts for which specific defendants 9 may be liable, after a conspiracy and participation are first alleged. To that end, Direct Plaintiffs 10 rely on a number of inapposite cases decided long before Twombly, holding that the DP-CC need 11 not allege overt acts by each individual defendant. Direct Opp. 23:16-28; 24:1-8. In their 12 reliance on these cases, Direct Plaintiffs ignore the threshold failure of the DP-CC even to 13 sufficiently allege the existence of, and any of the Hitachi defendants’ participation in, a 14 conspiracy, as required by Twombly. See 127 S. Ct. at 1966-67. But even these cases lend 15 Plaintiffs no support. These cases discuss the standard for proof of a conspiracy on motions for 16 summary judgment and possible vicarious liability only after a showing that a party joined and 17 participated in a conspiracy. They hold only that if a complaint successfully alleges a conspiracy 18 and alleges that an individual defendant participated in the conspiracy, then it need not allege 19 overt acts by each individual defendant in order for such defendants to be linked to the alleged 20 conspiracy. See, e.g., In re Bulk Popcorn Antitrust Litig., 783 F. Supp. 1194, 1197 (D. Minn.
 21 1991) (“Once a conspiracy is shown, only slight evidence is needed to link another defendant 22 with it.”) (emphasis added); Beltz Travel Serv. v. Int’l Air Travel Ass’n, 620 F. 2d 1360, 1367 (9th 23 Cir. 1980) (“If Beltz can establish the existence of a conspiracy . . . and that appellees were a part 24 of such a conspiracy, appellees will be liable”) (emphasis added).

25 Similarly, the Indirect Plaintiffs assert that the Hitachi defendants’ motion should be 26 denied because pleading particular acts by each defendant in a conspiracy is not required.
 27 Indirect Opp. at 9:22-23. In support of their argument, Indirect Plaintiffs misuse the SRAM
 28 Court’s Order of February 14, 2008. Indirect Opp. at 10: 2-4. First, the SRAM Order predates

1 Kendall, the latest and governing law in the Ninth Circuit. Second, in actuality, the SRAM 2 Court's statement supports the Hitachi defendants' position. In SRAM, the Court noted that at the 3 motion to dismiss stage, the complaint requires "allegations that plausibly suggest that each 4 Defendant participated in the alleged conspiracy." In re Static Access Memory Antitrust Litig., 5 2008 WL 426522, at *6 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 14, 2008) (emphasis added).

6 B. The DP-CC Lacks Sufficient Facts Even To Allege Parallel Conduct; Nor 7 Could It Survive On Such Allegations Alone.

8 Direct Plaintiffs claim that the DP-CC alleges parallel conduct together with factual 9 context showing that parallel conduct results from concerted action. Direct Opp. 2:3-4. But the 10 DP-CC's specific allegations are in fact, a far cry from raising even parallel conduct. Plaintiffs 11 not only lump all Hitachi entities together, they claim that the DP-CC's allegations as to all 12 "Defendants" or all "Japanese defendants," apply equally to this nonexistent composite entity 13 even while acknowledging that Hitachi Displays, Ltd. was not formed until 2002.¹ Even if the 14 DP-CC had alleged parallel conduct as to each Hitachi defendant, "[a] statement of parallel 15 conduct, even conduct consciously undertaken, needs some setting suggesting the agreement 16 necessary to make out a §1 claim; without that further circumstance pointing toward a meeting of 17 the minds, an account of a defendant's commercial efforts stays in neutral territory. Kendall, 18 2008 WL 613924, at *4 (quoting Twombly, 127 S. Ct. at 1966).

19 1. Formation of IPS Alpha Technology, Ltd. ("IPS Alpha")

20 Direct Plaintiffs' Opposition attempts to do what the DP-CC itself neglects to do, 21 asserting that the DP-CC states IPS Alpha was created in 2005 as a joint venture, consistent with 22 a supposed strategy to curtail supply. Direct Opp. 26:12-13. For this, Plaintiffs cite paragraph 60 23 of the DP-CC, which states only that IPS Alpha was formed to "to manufacture and sell TFT-24 LCD panels for televisions." Without any evidence of a collusive agreement, IPS Alpha's mere 25 formation for a concededly legitimate business purpose, does not and cannot support a conspiracy

26
 27 ¹ Plaintiffs cite authority for the proposition that a later co-conspirator can be liable for earlier 28 conspiratorial acts. Direct Opp. at 26 n.10. But the DP-CC itself says nothing about how Hitachi, Displays, Ltd. actually joined a conspiracy after its formation or participated in one.

claim. See Kendall, 2008 WL 613924, at *5 (“Allegations of facts that could just as easily suggest rational, legal business behavior by the defendants as they could suggest an illegal conspiracy are insufficient to plead a violation of the antitrust laws.”) (citing Twombly, 127 S. Ct. at 1964-66 & n.5); see also Arista Records LLC v. Lime Group LLC, 532 F. Supp. 2d 556, 579 n.30 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (discussing allegations against joint ventures and stating that “it is well settled that the mere opportunity to conspire does not by itself support the inference that such an illegal combination actually occurred.”) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

Plaintiffs again blithely lump defendants together in the apparent hope that their sweeping conclusions as to all will somehow adhere to each individual defendant. This time, they conflate both “Hitachi” and “Toshiba,” and IPS Alpha, merely on the basis of the initial joint venture formation. By the DP-CC’s own concession, only Hitachi Displays, Ltd. – not Hitachi, Ltd. or Hitachi Electronic Devices (USA), Ltd. is a joint venturer in IPS Alpha. *See DP-CC ¶ 60.*² Moreover, even as Direct Plaintiffs conflate these separate companies and groups of companies, the Indirect Plaintiffs have agreed and the Court has ordered that IPS Alpha is not a “Hitachi” defendant. See Stipulation and Order, Dkt. #488 (striking all references to Hitachi America, Ltd. and removing IPS Alpha from the collective reference to “Hitachi”).

Direct Plaintiffs’ Opposition claims that it is plausible to infer that the formation of IPS Alpha was itself a conspiratorial act, but the DP-CC pleading itself provides insufficient factual context to support such a claim of plausibility. The DP-CC concludes that the formation of IPS Alpha in 2005 was part of the TFT-LCD Products industry’s “significant consolidation” and that “[s]ome industry participants went as far as overtly suggesting that the industry should seek to curtail supply through mergers. These suggestions were carried out.” DP-CC ¶¶ 92, 135. The DP-CC is devoid, however, of facts alleging who made such “overt” suggestions to curtail supply through mergers, when, where, and how. See Kendall, 2008 WL 613924, at *4. Nor does it elaborate at all on how mergers were in fact employed to curtail supply, or how IPS Alpha in particular was used by any of the Hitachi defendants to join and participate in a conspiracy. The DP-CC admits that IPS Alpha was formed only in 2005, at least two years after the supposed “call[] for the industry to merge,” and its already insufficient allegations are all the more untenable as against Hitachi, Ltd. and Hitachi Electronic Devices (USA), Ltd., which are not even named as, and are not, members of the joint venture. Direct Opp. at 26:10-11; DP-CC ¶ 135.

Additionally, even if IPS Alpha’s formation can be inferred to be an instance of market concentration, allegations of market concentration are insufficient to render a conspiracy claim plausible as against any of the Hitachi defendants. See In re Late Fee and Over-Limit Fee Litig., 2007 WL 4106353, at *8-*10 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 16, 2007) (“plus factors” such as opportunities to communicate and market concentration, “whether taken singly or together, are insufficient to plead a case.”). Although Plaintiffs contend that “the mere formation of a corporate entity whose purpose is to create a combination in restraint of trade can itself be a violation,” they again ignore the fact that, as a threshold matter, there are no facts in the DP-CC plausibly alleging that IPS Alpha was formed with such a conspiratorial purpose.

2. Membership in Trade Associations

The DP-CC alleges nothing more than “Hitachi’s” membership in one trade association (“SEAJ”) and “presentations” by unnamed “Hitachi” officials on LCD technology at a single conference as support for its allegation that each of the Hitachi defendants participated in a worldwide price-fixing conspiracy. DP-CC ¶ 159, 162, 164. In fact, Plaintiffs’ own documents purporting to be the source for the DP-CC’s allegations and produced pursuant to this Court’s Stay Order, reveal that the only Hitachi entities that are members of SEAJ are not any of the Hitachi defendants in this case. As such, the DP-CC’s trade association allegation is not even asserted against any Hitachi defendant.³ The assertion in the Opposition that the DP-CC “alleges

³ Pursuant to paragraph 2 of the Court’s Order Granting United States’ Motion To Stay Discovery (Dkt. #300), Plaintiffs were ordered to produce “all documents referred to in the plaintiff’s complaint.” One of the documents produced by the Direct Plaintiffs listed the members of SEAJ. They listed the following Hitachi entities not named as Defendants in this case: Hitachi Kokusai Electric, Inc., Hitachi High Technologies Corporation, Hitachi Metals, Ltd., and Hitachi Plant Technologies, Ltd. Because the membership list was produced as a document referred to in the DP-CC, it is proper for the Court to take judicial notice of it. See

1 numerous meetings at which defendants, including specifically, Hitachi . . . had ‘opportunities to 2 exchange information or make agreement’” is thus demonstrably erroneous as to any of the 3 Hitachi defendants. In any event, the DP-CC itself fails to state any facts showing how a single 4 event was used by any of the Defendants, least of all by any of the Hitachi defendants, to further a 5 conspiracy, or even more basic – how a single event evidences a conspiracy at all.

6 3. Licensing Arrangement

7 As noted in the Hitachi defendants’ motion, the DP-CC’s allegation of a licensing 8 arrangement between “Hitachi” and “Chi Mei” does not support parallel conduct, let alone a 9 conspiracy claim. Twombly, 127 S. Ct. at 1971. The DP-CC fails to state any facts supporting 10 that this particular licensing arrangement plausibly supports a conspiracy claim rather than 11 rational, legal business behavior. Likewise, Plaintiffs’ allegations of early presence in the TFT-12 LCD industry by “Hitachi” and supposed quarterly average price relating to a single end product 13 of “Hitachi” plead only neutral commercial conduct.

14 Without more, association membership of three Hitachi entities not involved in this 15 litigation, conference attendance by unnamed “Hitachi” officials, and a license by a nonexistent 16 “Hitachi” composite, all fully consistent with a legitimate business purpose, do not state a 17 plausible claim against any of the Hitachi defendants. See Kendall, 2008 WL 613924, at *3, *5.

18 C. Indirect Plaintiffs’ Opposition Offers No Rebuttal To The Reality That The 19 Sparse Allegations As To The Hitachi Defendants Fail Even To Establish 20 Parallel Conduct, Let Alone A Conspiracy And That The Hitachi Defendants Participated In A Conspiracy.

21 Indirect Plaintiffs’ Opposition wholly ignores the insufficiency of the IP-CAC’s 22 allegations of consolidation and “opportunities for collusive activity” as to the Hitachi defendants, 23 as pointed out in the Hitachi Motion, at 5-6. The Opposition makes only the general statement 24 that the IP-CAC “details Defendants’ various information exchanges, . . . agreements resulting 25 from express invitations to collude, . . . and directly resulting price stabilization and increases.” 26 Indirect Opp. at 10:10-13 (emphasis added). Even while using the words “express,” and 27 Hitachi Defendants’ Request for Judicial Notice and Declaration of Kent M. Roger In 28 Support Thereof.

1 “directly,” Plaintiffs do not, either in their Opposition or in the IP-CAC itself, suggest how any of 2 the Hitachi defendants participated in any conspiracy. One searches in vain for evidentiary facts 3 in the IP-CAC itself sufficient to plausibly tie any of the Hitachi defendants to a price-fixing 4 conspiracy.

5 For example, the IP-CAC states merely that “cooperative arrangements . . . create[d] 6 additional opportunities for collusive activity. It then notes that “Chi Mei” has a licensing 7 arrangement with “Hitachi” (without identifying which) and others, and that “Defendant Hitachi 8 has a joint venture with, inter alia, Toshiba called IPS Alpha.” IP-CAC ¶ 122. (Again, only 9 Hitachi Displays, Ltd. and Toshiba Corporation are joint venturers in IPS Alpha). The IP-CAC 10 cursorily states that “Hannstar makes panels for Hitachi and Panasonic,” once again without 11 identifying which, and without any facts as to how such an arrangement (even assuming it exists), 12 establishes that any Hitachi defendant participated in a conspiracy. See IP-CAC ¶ 120; Kendall, 13 2008 WL 613924, at *4 (holding that a defendant’s commercial efforts stay in neutral territory, 14 absent any evidence of a “meeting of the minds”).

15 These allegations of mere “plus factors” as to a nonexistent composite “Hitachi” are 16 insufficient to allege parallel conduct on the part of any of the specific Hitachi defendants, let 17 alone plausibly allege that a conspiracy existed and that any of the Hitachi defendants actually 18 participated in a conspiracy. See In re Late Fee, 2007 WL 4106353, at *8-*10.

19 IV. CONCLUSION

20 Plaintiffs cannot escape the fact that they are required to state a claim for relief as to each 21 specific defendant but have failed to do so. Twombly, 127 S. Ct. at 1965; Jung, 300 F. Supp. 2d 22 at 164 n.27. The Complaints’ generalized allusions to activities of “Defendants” or “Japanese 23 defendants” can no more shed light on what any of the separate Hitachi defendants are alleged to 24 have done wrong, than can these sparse allegations in which Plaintiffs invoke a nonspecified 25 “Hitachi,” making demonstrably inaccurate and internally inconsistent assertions to boot.

26 For the reasons set forth herein and in their original moving papers, the Hitachi defendants 27 respectfully request that both the DP-CC and IP-CAC be dismissed as to them as a matter of law.
